Megatrends in Mobility

Automotive was the strongest growth engine for insurance in the 20th century, but mobility in the 21st could look very different.

Rapid urbanisation is taking place

In Europe more than 70% of the population live in cities. According to UN projections the urban population of Greece will be <80% by 2040. Cities need to become smarter as existing mobility infrastructures are under pressure.

Growing environmental and cost factors

As the world looks for more sustainable means of moving goods and people, we all need to make better and more dynamic use of existing systems, and experiment with newer tech-enabled mobility platforms.

Connected, shared & multi-modal mobility

Gradual embrace of micro-mobility. People are more willing to switch between travel modes depending on what makes most economic sense and are attracted to pay-as-you go mobility options.

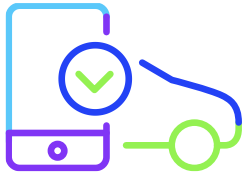

Supporting Innovation in Greece

Right from the start, Anytime has been associated with the innovative idea and pilot implementation of self-driving cars in Greece, as part of the pioneering project "CityMobil2", in collaboration with the Municipality of Trikala and development company "e-trikala SA".

Offering more, by actively supporting our customers' mobility needs, beyond insurance

Move beyond insurance – customer centric experiences

Collaboration, primarily, with likeminded startups

Supporting the piloting and integration of new mobility solutions, especially in urban areas

Our point of view

We are an insurer built using 21st century technologies. For us, insurance has always existed to support innovation, providing a safe-net against the risk of human endeavour.

It is our role to continue to support new and innovative solutions with insurance products and added-value services that meet the needs of people today. As the face of mobility changes, we are here to do more and to better at any time.
